

An aerial photograph of a river winding through a deep canyon. In the foreground, a large, flat, reddish-brown rock formation sits in the middle of the river. The river flows around this formation and continues into the distance, where it makes a sharp turn. The canyon walls are steep and layered with rock. The sky is a pale blue.

PHOTOGRAPHY · GIVEN AWAY

A NEW LENS

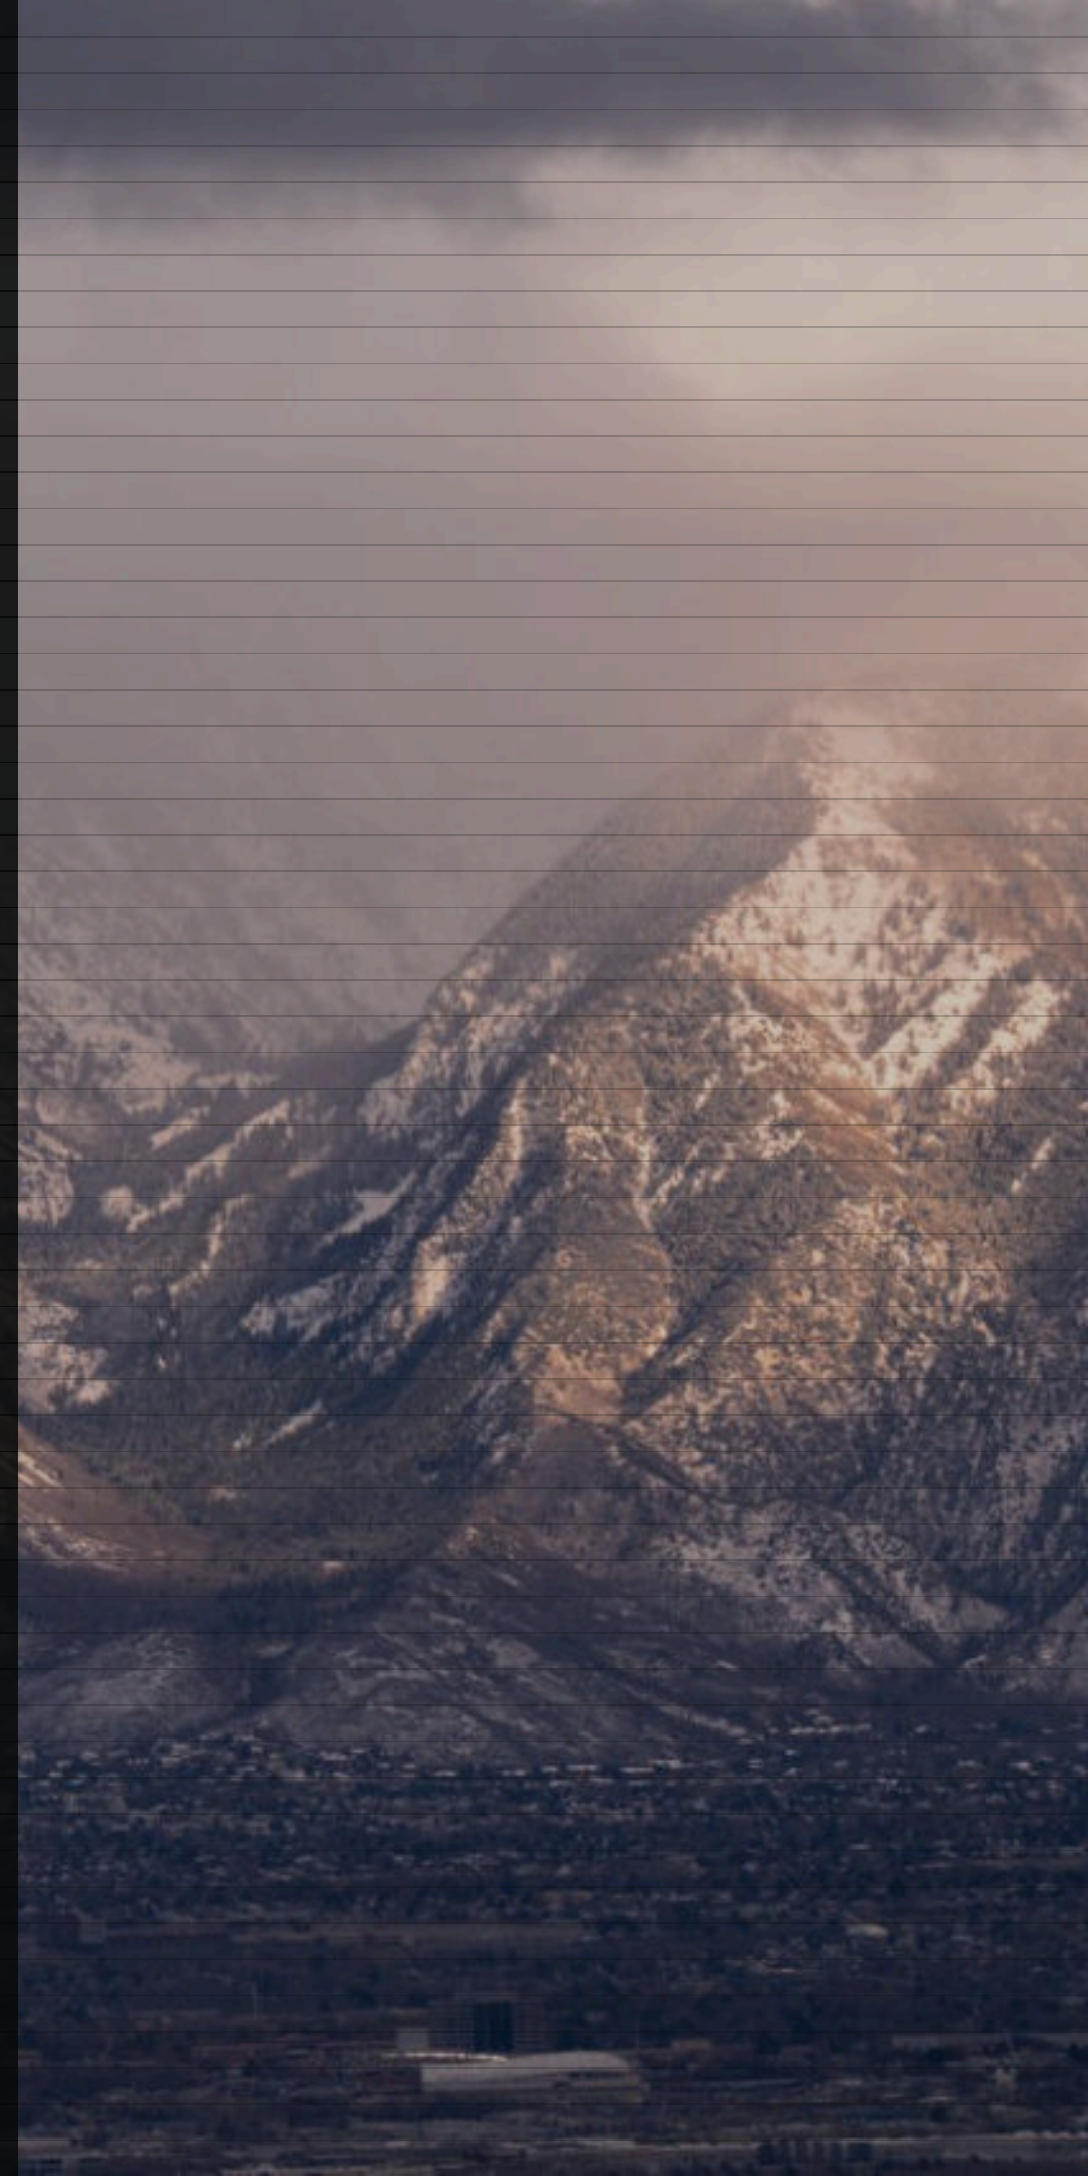

I take photos and videos. Then I give them away.

THE IDEA

Give it away

A few years ago I realized I had thousands of photos collecting dust on hard drives. Rather than trying to sell them one by one, I started sharing them for free on Unsplash and Pexels - partly to give back to the creative community, and partly because I loved the idea of my work actually being used.

A few million views turned into a few hundred million.

SELECTED WORK

RECOGNITION

Given away, and given back

~500M

Views and counting (434M+ and climbing)

Runner-Up

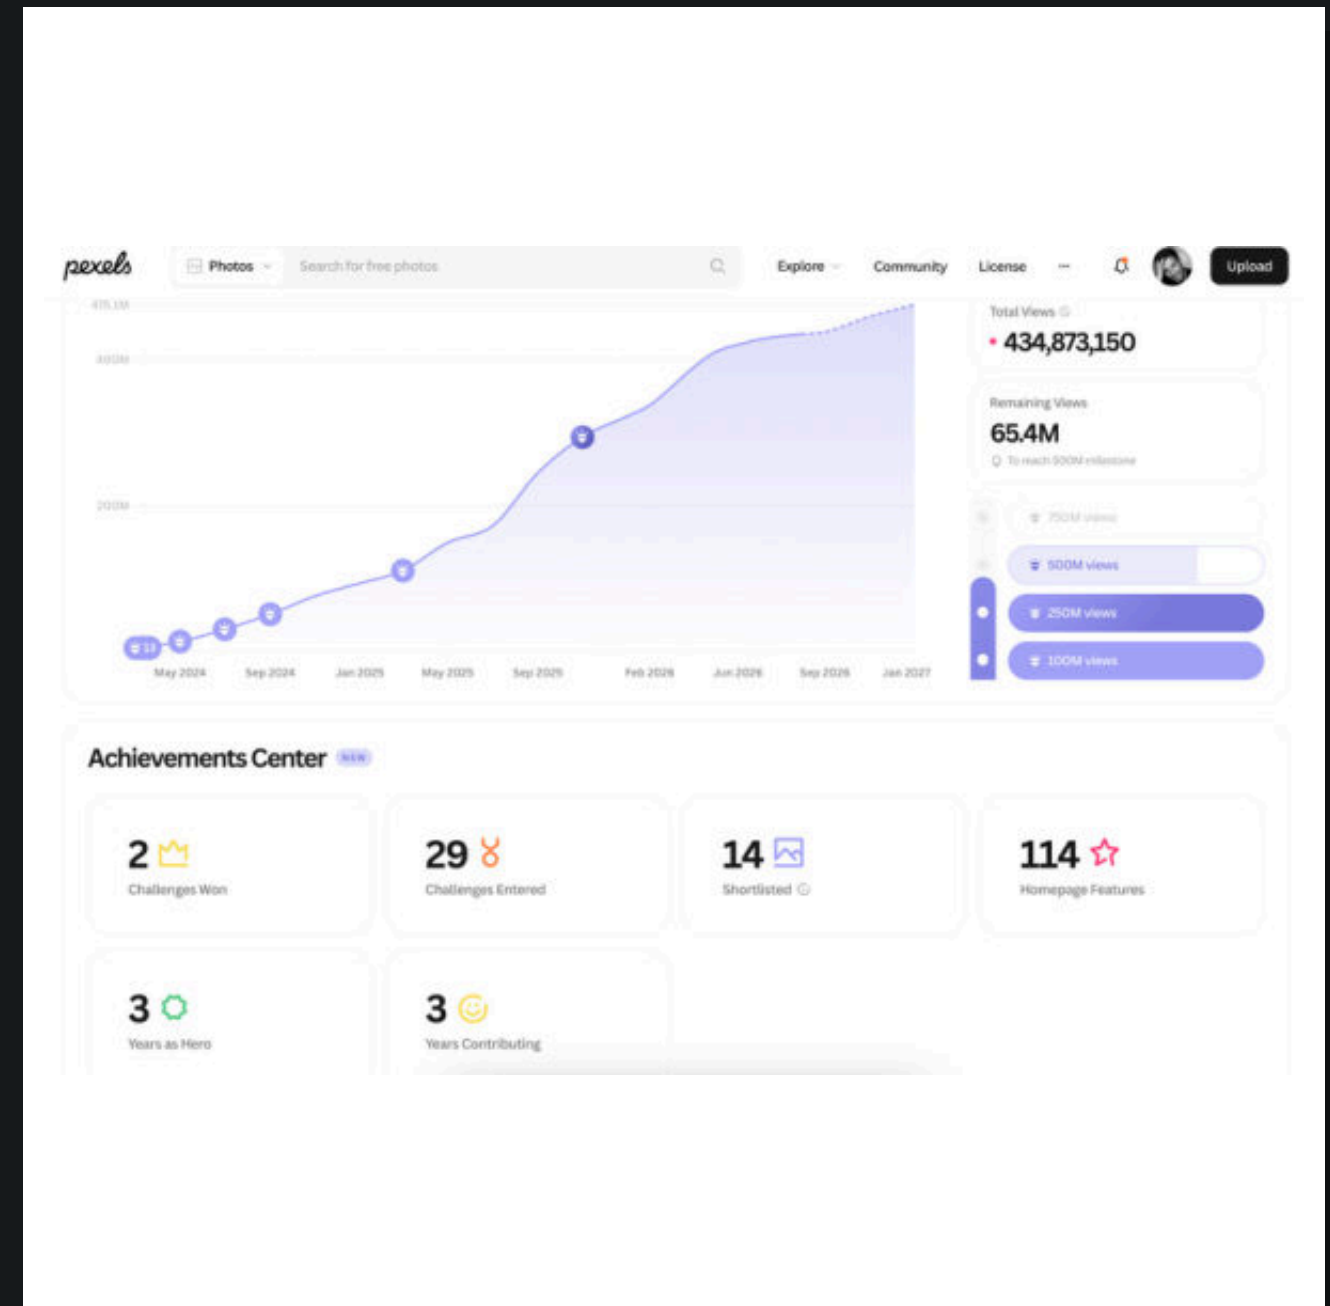

Unsplash Photo of the Year (view)

2

Pexels challenges won

114

Pexels homepage features

PEXELS CREATOR DASHBOARD

WHY I KEEP DOING IT

The numbers aren't really why I keep doing it. Sharing my work gives other creatives something they can use, gives me an audience I'd never have reached otherwise, and constantly pushes me to make better things.

Turns out giving my work away has given me quite a lot back.

SEE MORE · @ALEXMOLISKI · UNSPLASH · PEXELS

