

100 MILES OF WYOMING

YOUTUBE · CASE STUDY

ADVENTURE ALEX

Creator, filmmaker & storyteller - turning curiosity into cinematic adventure.

AT A GLANCE

The quick version

- > Concept -> script -> shoot -> edit -> publish
- > Long-form films + short-form content
- > Original cinematography, photography & drone work
- > Thumbnail design & creative packaging
- > Audience growth & community management
- > YouTube SEO, analytics & A/B testing
- > Monetized channel / revenue generation
- > Multi-day, remote & backcountry productions

THE CHANNEL

A personal lab for adventure

Adventure Alex started as a place to document the things I wanted to experience - and has grown into my personal laboratory for filmmaking, storytelling, and adventure.

It follows whatever curiosity pulls me outside next: backpacking the West's most iconic trails, searching remote creeks for gold, fly fishing alpine lakes, exploring forgotten places, or letting AI decide where I'm going. The subjects change, but the goal stays the same - find a story worth chasing, then make the viewer feel like they came along for it.

THE FILMS

Stories worth chasing

Wyoming's Best? · 13:36

After 100 miles of backpacking, I compare three of Wyoming's best trails head to head to see which is the best.

California Gold Mission · 26:01

In an attempt to add something new to the prospecting world, I invented a "game show" where my friend and I complete challenges to see who takes home THE RELIC, a rusty-shovel trophy.

Letting ChatGPT pick the route · 7:59

I had a question I wanted answered: can ChatGPT lead me to gold? I follow remote coordinates deep in the mountains to see if I can find some color.

THE PROCESS

No crew. Just me.

Every video is independently produced from beginning to end. I develop the concept, research and plan the adventure, write the story, shoot it in the field, capture photography and drone footage where permitted, and record myself while actually doing the thing - then handle the edit, color, sound, graphics, thumbnail, packaging, and publishing.

Often that means carrying camera gear for dozens of miles, or figuring out how to tell a story while simultaneously trying to catch a fish, find gold, climb a mountain, or just make it back to the truck.

THE CRAFT

Cinematic, but honest

That process pushed me toward a style that values quality over volume. I want the films to feel cinematic without losing the honesty of what actually happened.

Beautiful landscapes matter - but so do failed plans, bad weather, empty gold pans, exhausted trail conversations, and the unexpected moments that ultimately become the story.

A small, engaged following

Adventure Alex has grown into a small but highly engaged community that genuinely follows the adventures - offering advice, suggesting destinations, debating results, and coming back for the next experiment.

Some films have generated tens of thousands of views and hundreds of new subscribers on their own. But the comments and returning viewers are what make it feel like more than a collection of videos.

THE TAKEAWAY

Turning an idea into a complete creative product.

Concept. · Story. · Production. · Design. · Distribution. · Community.

There's no production crew behind Adventure Alex - just me, a camera, and usually an unnecessarily difficult idea. And that's probably why I keep doing it.

WATCH ON YOUTUBE >